- III. Curious pebbles and bits of stone; some singular „bombs” from the Volcan de Fuego.
- IV. Head of Bolivar (?) in gypsum; the work of an Indian.

Note: The scientific importance and high value of this collection, which comprises all told 1150 specimens, is evident; it illustrates no small a portion of the products of the Toltec and Maya civilisation, so nearly akin to that of the Aztecs. Most of the specimens are rare and, as I know by experience, difficult now to be got; not a few of the ceramics and objects in stone which form part of this collection are truly unique specimens.

- 3948-3972. Empty gourds in the shape of dishes and vessels; some with ornamental incisions. Valley of Rimac, Peru.
- 3973-4000. Gourds, mostly nearly entire and closed, containing small pebbles; possibly rattles. Valley of Rimac, Peru.
- 4001-4006. Gourds used as drinking vessels, one bound with cords. Ancon, Peru.
- 4007-4044. Iscupurus (lime-gourds) some ornamented with engravings, some with large leather funnel, wooden stopper and lime-spoon; most containing Ullpta or lime. Valley of Rimac, Lima. Peru.
- 4045-4059. Large gourd containing 14 ears of mais. Ancon, Peru.
- 4060-4101. Large gourd-dish containing 42 very large and fine Arachis pods. Ancon, Peru.
- 4102-4105. Large gourd-dish, containing 1 string of a dried fig (?) and 2 strings of sections of a hard (Palm?) nut. Ancon, Peru.
- 4106-4107. Two fruits of Granadilla. Ancon, Peru.
4108. Gourd-box containing fragments of different kinds of fruit. Ancon. Peru.
- 4109-4118. Gourd-dish containing 10 pieces of a sort of cake. Ancon, Peru,
- 4119-4138. Gourd-dish containing 19 pieces of a kind of cake or dried fruit paste, perhaps chunu, slices of frozen and dried potatoes. Ancon, Peru.
- 4139-4140. Gourd-dish containing a string of bored Arachis-pods. Ancon, Peru.
- 4141-4142. Two gourd-vessels containing beans (Phaseolus), of various kinds. Ancon, Peru.

- 4143-4151. Gourd containing the remains of: 3 Guinea-pigs; 1 large frog; 2 crabs; 2 shell-fish. Ancon, Peru.
4152. Gourd containing dark brown cotton-wool. Ancon, Peru.
4153. Gourd with cut cover containing cotton thread of different colors. Ancon, Peru.
- 4154-4156. Spheroidal small vases of terracotta, containing sand. Ciclayo, Peru.
- 4157-4158. Two striped cups of terracotta, one contains heavy sand the other red-lead (?). Arica, Peru.

9. Arte plumaria.

- 4159-4160. Fragments of two dresses, covered with red, green, yellow, blue and white feathers. Ancon, Peru.
- 4161-4162. Uncus (ponchos) covered with white and black feathers. Truxillo, Peru. Very fragile.
4163. Small uncu (poncho) covered with red and yellow feathers. Truxillo, Peru.
4164. Large uncu (poncho) covered with red, yellow and blue feathers. Truxillo, Peru.
- 4165-4167. Fragments of feathered cloth with white, yellow, red and blue feathers. Truxillo, Peru.
- 4168-4171. Four bunches, tufts or plumes of feathers of various colours and differently tied. Very fragile. Truxillo, Peru.
- 4172-4173. Two magnificent large and beautifully preserved head-dresses, with large crest, wide posterior flap and two long narrow side (ear) flaps. In one the whole is covered with the lovely and brilliant yellow, red and blue feathers of the great Macaw Parrot (Ara); those on the wide neck flap form ornamental designs amongst which are two human figures in blue and yellow on a red ground. The central zone of the cap is formed, or rather covered, with long flowing hair of a yellowish brown color (Dog's hair ?). In the second head-dress the crest is formed of axillary feathers of a Curlew (striped white and brown) artfully bound on small sticks; a broad zone of yellow-brown hair also surrounds the base of the cap, the upper front portion of which is covered with human hair. In this head-dress the flaps are covered with white and black feathers with zones and terminal fringes of red and blue. These are really two unique specimens of the greatest rarity and value. They were collected in a huaca on the Hacienda de Chocope, CHICAMA, near Truxillo, Peru. A feathered head-dress of this type in the collection of Prof. Raimondi at Lima, is figured by Hutchinson in „Two years in Peru.”

10. Addenda.

Modern Ecuador, upper Napo.

4174. Fine head-dress, an entire Trogon and circlet of wood covered with blue feathers of Cotinga.
- 4175-4176. Two fine diadems made with Parrot and Toucan feathers.
- 4177-4178. Two large and very beautiful head-dresses with bark cloth, Ara-tail feathers, Toucan and Parrot feathers, and ornamented with strings of variously colored seeds, land-shells and beaks of Pteroglossi.
- 4179-4180. Two beautiful head circlets of Toucan and Parrot feathers.

4181. String of red and yellow dyled feathers (look of European make).
4182-4184 . Three grand ornamental belts, with entire vividly colored birds (Rupicola, Dacnis, Calliste) attached to strings with beads, monkey-teeth, sections of wing- bones and seeds.
4185-4186. Two beautiful rattling dancing belts, made with two different kinds of dried nuts.
4187-4189. Three necklaces, two of seeds, one of beads and monkey teeth.
4190. Singular dancing apron : a net-work of human hair, feathers, reeds and pendants of jaguar and alligator teeth and seeds.
4191-4193. Fine dancing-aprons, a net-work of sections of reeds and seeds.
4194-4195, Two dancing garters of same work and pattern as the aprons.
4196-4201. Three short ponchos and three pairs of short trowsers, of white cotton cloth; ornamented with stained figures of men, with fringe and edgings of colored thread and seeds. Highly interesting and perfectly fresh.

Note : The very great value and importance of this collection is too obvious to be insisted on by me ; rarely indeed so rich and varied a series of specimens illustrating the singular and highly interesting civilisation of Tlahuantin-Suyu, the Empire of the Yncas, has been brought together.

The series of mummies of adults of both sexes and of children and babes is remarkable ; several are yet untouched in their original wrappings. others have their singular square funereal tablets with pictographs, one is of special value with face painted red and tattooings on the body. The variety of postures in this series is also notable. Of the detached mummified heads, one specimen with all its thick brown hair gathered in many plaits on each side is of great interest and value. The large collection of crania of the two sexes and all ages is also of great interest : the two extreme types of deformation, viz. the trilobate and brachycephalic of the northern sea-board or Yuncasuyu, and the elongate macrocephalic of the south or Collasuyu, are represented by magnificent specimens; it is rare indeed to see collected so rich and important materials for the study of the craniology of the ancient Peruvians. The two skull-masks from the Valley of the Rimac, on whose singular value I have elsewhere spoken, are as yet to my knowledge, unique specimens. Again would I call attention to the parts of mummies, especially the tattooed arms, whose rarity is well known; one such, which was part of a former collection formed by Prof. Mazzei and presented by him to the National Museum of Anthropology at Florence, has been described and figured in a special memoir by Prof. Mantegazza.

The collection of ceramics is very rich, consisting of no less than 884 specimens. The two sorts, black ware and light-red or yellow ware, are largely represented. The assortment and varieties of household, ornamental, sacred and funereal vessels are great, and the coarser and finest fabrics shown in extensive series. Most of the more singular types in shape, rendered familiar by the illustrations of Squier Wiener, Reiss and Stübel and others, are there, and many more which have never yet been figured. This collection contains some of the very best productions of the polymorphic ceramic Art of the Ancient Peruvians, of special interest are the finer anthropomorphous vases from Truxillo (Chimu), showing various kinds of tattooing, and those with mythic or emblematic figures in relief or painted in graffito style; there are many silvadores, or double whistling vessels, and some of very singular shapes.

The specimens in stone have amongst them some of very great interest and value, thus the two large solid thrones from Manabi in Ecuador, the seat resting on a recumbant human figure; in few Museums have I seen any such. The harpoon fore-shafts with flint points from Arica are also of high interest.

Again the necklaces made with minute round flat sections of bits of red (Spondylus) and white or black shells are very important and strangely like similar ornaments from Micronesia and Melanesia. The objects in bone are mostly small tools: the needles and needle-cases, so like those of the Eskimo are of peculiar interest : and so are the fish-hooks in two pieces from Caldera (Chile).

Not very extensive but of great interest is the series of objects in metal ; and amongst these I wish to point out more especially : the curious necklaces of flat round thin discs and hollow boxes with a human face, in silver ; the gold-plated pins or topus in bronze ; the copper axes, spear points , mace-head with star-like rays in shape of human heads ; the numerous sacred or votive implements, knives and spoons with human figures and the sun on them ; a set of small quaint idols ; and lastly a series of small emblematic vessels, fac-similes of those in terracotta, but made with copper plate, thin as paper.

Amongst the specimens in wood, the carved idols and the sceptres made of pisonay or chonta, are by far the most remarkable ; and then the masks and small votive vessels. Such specimens are rare in all Peruvian collections, and some of those in this one are indeed unique. Great is the series of spindles and weaving and knitting implements ; many quaintly carved and curiously colored.

But one of the grandest and most important features of this collection is beyond doubt the series of textile fabrics and tissues. I need hardly dwell on the large assortment of raw materials, the balls and skeins of cotton thread of divers sizes and of various colors, the cotton-wool of different kinds prepared for spinning, and the reeds, flat sticks and reels with thread of many colors prepared for weaving. What strikes one is the rich and varied collection of cloths illustrating amply every branch of the truly wonderful textile art of the ancient Peruvians, from the thin gossamer like ccompi, a true muslin, to the stouter cotton tissue, white, brown, blue or salmon-color, of a uniform tint or colored in stripes. But the gems and marvels of this unique collection are the numerous and varied samples of beautiful tapestry or Gobelins fabrics and the wonderful fringes. No words can adequately describe the finer specimens, of which an idea can alone be obtained by ocular inspection or by good colored reproductions ; as M.^r Holmes observes in his brief but masterly essay on the subject, the cleverness shown in introducing irregular forms of nature into geometric outlines is marvellous. It is evident that the tapestry or Gobelin method was almost universally employed in richly decorated stuffs; in these the colors are rich and harmonious beyond description. The collection also contains several very fine samples of stamped or printed cloth, with figures in brown on a white ground; such cloths are excessively rare. The extremely long narrow bands and the coca-bags or chuspas, many of which form part of this collection, offer splendid specimens of the various kinds of tapestry work; I may also mention the slings, often in this case. The collection also contains fine samples of patch-work and a large and varied assortment of rich and beautiful fringes. The larger pieces of cloth, like big sheets, were doubtless a sort of toga or mantel, these often have the two narrow ends ornamented with elaborate and beautiful borders or fringes. The feminine llictas and the masculine uncus, the latter true ponchos of various sizes and very different tissues, as again many smaller articles of dress are represented by a large number of specimens. Specimens of knitting and netted stuffs as also true nets are again numerous and varied in the Mazzei collection. Amongst the textile fabrics I have also included the specimens of baskets and basket-work and matting, of which fine and varied specimens are represented in this collection.

Under the heading „Varia” I have placed articles of many kinds, thus the different sandals (usutas), some plaited in vegetable fibres of different sorts, others cut out of tough leather. A large collection of women's work-baskets, these are very neatly made with lid attached, of long quadrangular shape and different sizes; all have their original contents and are thus of singular but melancholy interest giving a long posthumous insight into the daily life of the long-dead women and girls of the coast-land of Ttahuantin suyu, being all from Ancon.

The series of chuspas or small portable bags, mostly in fine tapestry-work, yet filled with the dried leaves of the Erythroxylon Coca, and the small pear-shaped gourds (iscupuru) containing powdered lime and the spoon in wood or bone for dosing the lime, are also of singular interest being the Vade-mecum of the ancient Peruvian, a Coca-chewer as his modern descendant. And again the gourd-dishes or basins yet filled with various kinds of eatables: ears of maïs, ground-nuts (Arachis), beans, dried fruits and others.

The last category of the Mazzei collection contains some unique and truly splendid samples of the „Arte plumaria” of the ancient Peruvians, which are edoubtless amongst the rarest and most valuable of their relics. The Peruvians had certainly not carried that beautiful art to the perfection it had attained amongst the Aztecs, but they had far surpassed the best productions of the modern natives of Amazonia. The two great feather head-dresses from the Chimu region described briefly in the Catalogue are truly grand and wonderful specimens. As an addenda, especially to this last category, are added some very fine feather ornaments, necklaces, dancing skirts and curious articles of dress with figures painted on them, belonging to modern natives of the Upper Napo; they are of a kind not usually seen in Ethnographical Museums and are therefore valuable and interesting.
